18. You are studying whether there is a relationship between the age of the mother at the time of the birth of a child and the child's weight at birth. You collect data from 100 mothers and their children. The data are as follows:

This study and the prospect of its being used to justify racist, ethnic, religious, political, sexual, or engineering stereotypes is the authors' last and possibly worst. It is left to us, as regards this issue, to be personally responsible to the public and ourselves. While authors should be engineering historians, they should not be engineers. It is one of the great ironies of our profession that it is almost impossible to be concerned for the good of the profession as a whole.

Point of Interest: One of the most significant challenges in the development of a sustainable business model is the need to balance financial, social, and environmental goals. This requires a deep understanding of the market, the community, and the environment, as well as a willingness to experiment and iterate. The business model canvas is a useful tool for visualizing and testing different business models, and it can be adapted to incorporate social and environmental considerations. For example, a business model that focuses on social impact might include a goal to create jobs for a specific community, while a business model that focuses on environmental impact might include a goal to reduce carbon emissions. By using the business model canvas, entrepreneurs can explore different combinations of these goals and see how they might fit together to create a sustainable business model.
